NEW LONDON AND ITS EX-GOVERNOR

Thomas M. Waller Still Ready to Help Whenever Opportunity Offers-More Changes on Police Force-Increased Ferry Service Sought While Col. Ledyard Goes to Scrap Heap.

(Special to The Bulletin.)

New London, May 3.—Gormer Governor Thomas M. Waller was the magnet that drew the large crowd to the soldiers and sailors one night this week and it was he who held the many assembled at the rally for Liberty loan bonds, arranged for and conducted by Capt, J. N. Lapointe, a leading manufacturer, at New London, and an enthusiastic home guarder and patriotic citizen. Mayor Rogers closed his remarks by introducing Mr. Waller as New London's Grand Old Man. Those close to the governor know that he did not relish the honorable and well-intended title bestowed on him, for he does not consider himself in the old men's class, believing that a man is as old as he makes himself. Not long since the governor remarked:

"When a man comes to you and says you look as young as you did 25 wears and he morthly to he are that it really made him sick, and he was eff duty he declared that he did not hanker to go back to his old line of duty he declared that he did not hanker to go back to his old line of duty and an agreeable place was made for him in the department. He was appointed additional desk sergeant, with hours of duty from midnight to $ in the morning, thereby making the work day of each sergeant at the desk eight hours. Formerly the two sergeants were required to be on duty twelve hours each.

The change in Sergeant Beebe's tour of duty left a vacancy in the street sergeantsy, and this promotion came unsolicited to Policeman David Nagle. He asked to be excused from that duty on the ground that the work was more than he could do properly, by reason of health conditions, and he

Away back in the dark days of 1861, when the first call came for volunteers in the war with the south, this same "Tom" Waller was known all over the state as the "Brilliant Boy Orator," but that title was as objectionable to him, perhaps, just as much as is the "Grand Old Man." He was one of the very first to mount the restrum in the old courthouse, or a drygoods box in the street, and talk for the preservation of the union. Not only that; he was among the very first to step up and enlist, and he has the real honor of having been a member of the first company that went from New London in the Civil war. What he did then he would undoubtedly do now, were he eligible. While the then young Waller did not participate in any of the great battles of the war, it was not of his choosing. He was rejected from millitary duty after short service by reason of defective eyesight, a defect that could not be overcome. He offered to risk his life for country. Who could do more?

and the police committee, turned a good card when satisfactory place was made for Sergt, Benjamin Beebe, one of the best and most faithful men that ever donned a policeman's uniform in New London. When Lieuten ant Jeffers was appointed acting captain, Sergeant Beebe was made acting lieutenant, a position that he really believed he deserved by reason of faithful service, a position that he really believed to go any farther. When Charles Pinney was appointed captain that sent Lieutenant Jeffers back to his old job, and that meant back to duty as night street sergeant for Benjamin Beebe. > The local policemen have donned white gloves and white caps for the summer, and it is extremely difficult for the uninitiated to tell a cop from a naval officer, and vice versa, and there are a great many naval officers in New London. The officers of the navy are held up frequently and mistaken for policemen and are queried on matters that are wholly within the province of the police, and on the other hand the local cops are called upon to answer questions that are propounded under the supposition that they are representatives of the navy. Naturally the townspeople can tell a cop by his walk a block away and never confuse the one with the other. The se retary of the navy was in New London on Friday, and he may note the simi-larity in dress and may issue orders to Mayor Rogers to have the local police prevented from masquerading as naval officers. And he may not.
